Green, Clean, and Less Harmful to your Spleen: Major Civil Redevelopment Underway in Banhattan

by lamFaron

If you're finding that the smell outside your window in the morning has been less fungal in recent days, you're not alone! Aligning with widespread infrastructure upgrades around the city, Banhattan's civil servants are hard at work on the new Banhattan Urbanization Project. The initiative started after widespread calls for a city cleanup; the infrastructure of the business district had fallen into large scale disrepair following the leadership of the last two councils, culminating in an unprecedented closure order from the Banhattan Bureau of Health and Safety.

"It's a nightmare!" The BHBHS commissioner had to say. "The heavy-waste factory is between a soup kitchen and a recreational zone. The back alleys are riddled with uncollected trash. Th- the ground was purple! Did nobody notice this? Did we just stop paying attention to this?"

Our reporter on the scene was able to look outside and confirm that the ground was, indeed, purple. Huh. We never noticed that.

While most residents and business owners celebrate the change, others have organized angry protests, stating that the rich fungal networks and constant athlete's foot is an important part of Banhattan's culture and identity.

Most of the green space around Banhattan has already been restored to... well, green space, but District Council assures us there is much more to come. Expect to see newly paved roads, updated public safety features like signage and street lighting, and a myriad of new scenery befitting the district's high-quality goods and services.

While it is unclear where District Council acquired the funding for such a large scale project, data from the Banhattan Business Bureau suggests the booming plushie industry in the area may be responsible for this cash injection.

Unless you're a fan of barren, fungal landscapes, there's never been a better time to join the most lucrative* district of the city. In the meantime, if you wish to help with more widespread redevelopment efforts, the city engineer is seeking workers to update larger road networks in the area.

For now, this is Herald Saltire writing for the Global Golem, signing off.

A Smol Obsession with Dahlias

by Kwissmiss and be_loved

In our wonderful Discord channel “Floofs and Snapshots”, Kwis shared some photos she took of dahlias from an event near her at Castle Keukenhof. Thus launched a very long conversation between the two of us about all things dahlias. They happen to also be one of my favorite flowers, and off we went into dahlia-land. While Kwis only shared a few of the pictures that were “good enough” to post, she shared ALL the pictures with me. Because I am the editor of this newsletter, I boldly declared that I would share all of them with everyone. So here we are. Also included is a picture of my dahlia blooming, which pales in comparison to the plethora of beautiful flower photos she shared. Please enjoy over 80 pictures of dahlias a la Kwissmiss (and kinda sorta me, be_loved).

Did I just spend half an hour copy, pasting, resizing and organizing over 80 pictures of dahlias?

Yes, yes I did. And, I have no regrets. The two below are my plants. The first blooms this spring and then what I expect to be their final blooms this fall.

I hope you enjoyed the beauty.

From Kwis:

My love for dahlias started with my mom's garden. She started with a few and it kept growing to be more and more. Every autumn, there would be at least 3 vases full of flowers at all times. I especially loved the big ones, dinner plate dahlias! It is just mesmerizing to see how many petals such a flower can have and how big of a flower can be carried by such a small stem!

Then when I moved out of the house, I don't see those flowers as regularly anymore and I don't have a garden. Every now and then we have visited small gardens which had some dahlias, but I always wanted to delve into that shared love for dahlias with my mom and go to a big show!

Every year, we tell each other that we will make time, but our schedules are hard to align... So, this year, I told her in the end of June: "Keep the last weekend of august open! We are finally gonna go to a dahlias event!"

And this year, we finally did it! We walked around the gardens of the Keukenhof, which were full of all types of dahlias! From small ponpon types to big dinner plate dahlias. We took so many pictures (I took like 500+...) and I had such a hard time choosing my favourites - they are all just so good!

So here are the 84 best pictures I took that day ✨

Most dahlias are named after people, but some have cute names, like Santa Clause and Marshmellow! Or strange names like D4.. reminding me of fellow titans !

This is your reminder to stop and smell the roses dahlias.

Decided to go for a crossword this time around. If you have ideas for other types of puzzles for me to put together, make mention of it in the #Newsletter channel. Maybe I'll do some kind of skew on a Wordle. Seems a touch brief for a monthly newsletter though. Anyways, click HERE to play the interactive crossword.

Zalvy's Poetry Corner

A zombie drags his youthful body,
along the ground with preppy steps,
under dimly beaming moonlight,
in the pitch-black night as day.

There a cunning villager wandered,
beaming just with innocence.
An encounter so delightful,
the villager yet never left.

Such is why a brave, bright player, ran when he saw zombies two.
Luckily he dodged the prize,
had he cured the villager.
